Are you interested to gain a deeper understanding of how race, gender, class, sexuality, and identity operate simultaneously in our lives?

We will explore this theme as we engage the concept of “intersectionality” as it arose in feminist thought and its applications in gender and sexuality studies research and in the pursuit of social justice. You will read the work of the foundational scholars, such as Bambara, Lorde, Anzaldúa, Moraga, Hill Collins, Nakano Glenn, and Crenshaw. Discuss contemporary debates in the field today and consider the stakes of theory and praxis in pursuit of social change.

For information, contact:
Dr. Heather Montes Ireland
heather.montesireland@marquette.edu