MEDLIFE partners with communities in developing countries to increase their access to MEDS: Medicine, Education, and Development. Our mission is accomplished through Mobile Clinics, where local professionals and international volunteers work together in the most impoverished and remote regions of Peru, Ecuador, and Tanzania.

MEDLIFE Mobile Clinic trips offer a unique opportunity to students interested in education-focused careers. Volunteers spend one to two weeks assisting local nurses and doctors in various medical stations, which includes culturally sensitive teaching programs to address community health concerns. Volunteers will gain firsthand experience, while identifying relationships between healthcare, environment, development, and education, ultimately leading to a deeper understanding of the root causes of poverty and inequality. MEDLIFE volunteers have a direct and tangible impact on the communities we serve, while also contributing to a larger, sustainable solution.
