The Marquette Lonergan Project, which operates under the auspices of the Theology Department, is at the heart of a collaborative international venture to assemble a new systematic theology.

In a fall colloquium held at Marquette last year, a number of Marquette faculty and graduate students in theology joined professors from Toronto and Sydney to hammer out a sequence of topics. This sequence has been accepted by the team responsible for the project, and plans are moving ahead to assemble the materials into five volumes.

Robert M. Doran, S.J., who holds the Emmett Doerr Chair in Catholic Systematic Theology, “A New Project in Systematic Theology”

The Marquette Lonergan Project, which operates under the auspices of the Theology Department, is at the heart of a collaborative international venture to assemble a new systematic theology.

In a fall colloquium held at Marquette last year, a number of Marquette faculty and graduate students in theology joined professors from Toronto and Sydney to hammer out a sequence of topics. This sequence has been accepted by the team responsible for the project, and plans are moving ahead to assemble the materials into five volumes.

Robert M. Doran, S.J., who holds the Emmett Doerr Chair in Catholic Systematic Theology, will present the annual Emmett Doerr Lecture: “A New Project in Systematic Theology.” The lecture will summarize the results of last fall’s colloquium, as these have now been assembled into the plan for a five-volume work.

Responses to the lecture will be given by Danielle Nussberger, Assistant Professor of Theology, and Jeremy Blackwood, Instructor of Theology. The responses will be followed by open discussion.